

Edgardo García (Ph. D.)

Bachelor degree in Political Science (University of Buenos Aires); Postgraduate Courses in International Relations (FLACSO, Argentina) and Corporate Communication (UCES, Argentina); Master and PhD in Communications (University of Westminster, United Kingdom)

University lecturer since 1992. He has taught at the University of Buenos Aires, University of Belgrano, University Torcuato Di Tella, Universidad Argentina de la Empresa and Universidad de Palermo, in Argentina; the University of Westminster (London) and Robert Gordon University (Aberdeen) in the United Kingdom. The different courses taught cover the fields of History, Political Theory, Communication and Public Relations.

He has received different distinctions: the Scholarship for Young Leaders, granted by the Fundación Universitaria de Río de la Plata and the United States Information Agency; the Eikon Prize for Internal Communications and the Quentin Hogg Scholarship, for his Ph.D. at the University of Westminster.

Among his publications may be mentioned: "Online News production in Argentinean newsrooms" in the book Making Online News: The Ethnography of New Media Production (2008); the paper "Interactivity in Argentinean Online Newsrooms", in Revista ZER (English Edition); and the chapter "Things to consider. Speculations on the sociology of online news" in Towards New Media Paradigms. Content, Producers, Organizations and Audiences.

He has participated in international conferences in Tarragona and Pamplona (Spain), Tromsø (Norway); Montegrotto (Italy) and Buenos Aires (Argentina). In addition to his academic activity, Dr. García has worked professionally in the field of corporate communication.